Incidents Which Spice the Life of "Tenderloin" Enumerators,

At 7 o'clock this morning 947 policemen assembled in their respective station-houses, were instructed in the duties of census enumeration and dispersed to the work of ascertaining the true total of the population of New York.

There was one blue coat for each election district of the city, and each precinct captain will be held responsible for the work in his precinct. The officers detailed to the work of enumeration were selected with stedial reference to fitness for the work, and the mer are the most intelligent, best educated members of Supt. Murray's force. In each precinct the Captain read the in structions to enumerators issued by Chief Inspector Byrnes, as follows, after which type-written copies are distributed among the men:
